The Friends of Grove Street Cemetery joined the New Haven Museum in presenting an illustrated talk by Professor Peter Dobkin Hall in October about this local firm. Subtitled, “Artisanship and Entrepreneurship in New Haven’s Monument Industry”, Hall recounted the personal stories and evolving tastes in monument designs, carving techniques and stone materials which the firm developed over its 140 year history. The Phillips Company created thousands of the carved memorials in Grove Street and other local cemeteries, serving a clientele as varied as the city’s diverse population. An interesting footnote: apparently New Haven tastes were somewhat more conservative and less extravagant, on average, than some other Northeastern cities. Many of the business records of the firm are now in the Museum, thanks largely to Mr. Hall.
Henry H. Townshend, Jr.
(March 27, 1920–July 28, 2012)

As you walk through the cemetery today you will see many monuments and stones with the Townshend or Townsend, variations of the same family name, and Harry, as he was more generally known, was the seventh generation Townshend to live in New Haven. Harry’s ancestor Martha Townsend and her two infant sons were the first interments at Grove Street Cemetery in 1797, and he joins many other ancestors and relatives buried there. His father, Henry Sr., was the former cemetery historian and whose paper on the subject is on the Grove Street Cemetery website. Harry’s wife, Deb Townshend, is a writer of New Haven history including The Streets of New Haven, which references many of the famous people buried at the Cemetery.

Harry attended the New Haven’s Hopkins School, Dartmouth College and served the U.S. Army in WWII, being honorably discharged as Captain. He was Supervisor at Marlin Firearms, Director of Union Trust Co. and Northeast Bancorp, Chairman of the Proprietors of the New Haven Green and President of Grove Street Cemetery’s Standing Committee for many years. In this role, Harry guided the supervision of the cemetery, including overseeing upkeep and continued enhancement of the cemetery’s grounds. He was particularly interested in the preservation of plantings and maintaining the condition of the historic brownstone walls.

In Karyl Evans’ documentary film, Grove Street Cemetery: City of the Dead, City of the Living, Harry and other family members are interviewed, regaling the cemetery’s history and culture. In a conversation with Harry a few years ago, he spoke at length to this writer about the cemetery and the Townshend family plots. He was proud to speak of where he would be buried, on Sycamore Avenue with his parents. Mrs. Townshend also related, “It tickled Harry that his burial site was near Walter Camp, the father of American football”… since Harry played football at Dartmouth!”

Milton Devane
(June 20, 1929–April 7, 2012)

Milton was an important lawyer in New Haven, known for his thoughtful intellect, decency and diplomacy, qualities which he brought to the management of Grove Street Cemetery. The son of William Devane, Dean of Yale College, who urged his students to “not waste a moment without reading,” he inherited this trait and desire. He attended New Haven’s Foote School, Phillips Exeter Academy, Yale College and Law School, Cambridge University and was a Naval officer in the Korean War. He rose rapidly in the New Haven law firm of Tyler, Cooper, Grant, Bowerman & Keefe where he became a partner.

Milton was known for his sense of civic justice and social fairness and his diplomacy extended beyond the legal profession. In addition to his work conducting many of the business affairs on the Standing Committee of the Cemetery, Milton sometimes brought together parties with disparate views to reach mutual consensus. He and his wife Margie were also involved in preserving the cemetery’s historical aspects. He participated with others in obtaining National Register of Historic Places recognition for Grove Street and eventually achieving National Historic Landmark status. His vision for the cemetery was to maintain the 19th century design, working to preserve the walls in their original design, maintaining the trees and restoring the meeting house, which work continues.

After his passing, the Standing Committee issued a Memorium statement, which reads in part, “…The greatest good is often that which is unnoticed and even unknown. Counting our blessings is too often saved for special occasions and taken for granted the rest of the time. One of those blessings was the time, effort and effectiveness of Milton’s years of work for the cemetery. He was a visionary lawyer, respected colleague and generous mentor to those of us who followed him. We recognize that Milton was a very special person — decent, fun and caring, a good mix to which all of us might aspire…”

Upon meeting Milton at my first Board meeting of the Friends of Grove Street Cemetery, this writer was impressed with his warm welcome and soft-spoken manner, a true gentleman. He is buried on Sylvan Avenue with his father and mother, surrounded by Arborvitae, the “tree of life”.

News Notes

• Ben Sandweiss, arborist and Board member states the cemetery’s early storms the past year. Thanks to on-going pruning, relatively minor damage to trees was experienced in Hurricane Sandy of late October 2012, the blizzard of Halloween right after Sandy and the massive snows (approximately 30 inches) and high winds of the February 8th 2013 blizzard, which closed local schools for a week.

• Chief Docent Patti Illingworth has reported that last year tours were provided to over 1800 individuals, including groups from a wide variety of organizations. Patti would welcome new docents to help guide visitors. See information on page 4.

• Major improvements have been made to the perimeter of the cemetery on Ashman Street with new lights, sidewalks and tree pruning and along Prospect Street with a new brownstone-curbed planting bed with scarlet oak trees, groundcover and daffodil bulbs as well as new sidewalks. The improvements were designed by TowersGolde, Landscape Architects, and were made possible by Yale University with cooperation from the City of New Haven.
Spring Horticultural Tours

A program titled “Flowers and Remembrance” was presented in May 2012, including tours and introductory remarks about the history of planting in Grove Street. A handout was created for the use of the docents covering some of the symbolic associations of trees and flowers related to cemeteries, death and mourning. Many memorials in the cemetery have symbolic floral and foliage decorative carvings. The program was well-attended and included a reception at Mory’s, the newly renovated Yale-affiliated club just down York Street from the cemetery.

On April 24th of this year, coincidentally the 375th Anniversary date of the founding of New Haven, Friends of Grove Street have teamed with the New Haven Garden Club to present a well-researched tour focusing on the horticulture and notable trees within our grounds. Tree species have been documented and a detailed narrative has been outlined which may be developed into a walking tour brochure.
